THIS SONG, WITH GLOWING AFFACTION TO THE soul that still beams through Miss O. I., of St.

The blood rag still waves o'er Kitcrea's gray o'd abbey;
The knife anight still rules in my forefathers' home;
The vulture still craves o'er the grandson of Padly,
That alees 'neath the ruin o' that ivy atales dome.
And yet o'er the East far liegers the morning star,
While I wait imparient to welcome the day.
To wis back for Mary the old bouse and dairy.
The home of brave parent—her forefathers' lea.
And still as it swings o'er the blood of O'Leasy,
The whaler of royal thief, tyrant and fee;
His soul ever aings o'er the sprites of the brave free;
The laurel of loyalty to cleave as they go.
Oh, oh while this tears me my spirit me'er weary
Home rovingly stole with my heart's will to stray
Where first it mst Mary is agring of life early,
An care free I stroll'd nigh the Abbey Kilerea.
There sleeps 'neath the tower's old ivy crowned lower;

As care free I stroll'd migh the Abber Kilcrea.

There sleeps 'neath the tower's old try crowned lower;
Its glorious souled founder, the old monk screen,
while still blooms the flower o' his sunny heart's hower,
Unfading bed under the heath ever green.
Yet though they moulder there, shoulder to shoulder
yeer.
The virtues of yore are here cherished within,
As deep thawing story blooms honest laws glory),
o blossom the core of all true Irishmen.
till true as night waned on the newsboy doth sheen on,
o' th' morning star brightens and i must away.
Ere the sun bles meridian l'Il telt the old green on,
and hie there to fight in the hot flashing may
of Gree fisming fever, the red foe to sever,
And trample the tone o' the last tyrant's mean.
Then back to the dairy, I'll take my loved Mary,
Retreat of the brave bone, her forefathers' home.
